A sniper is a highly qualified soldier specialized in shooting targets with rifles modified by incredibly long. distances. They are also skilled in stealth techniques, camouflaged, infiltration and observation. The main role of the sniper battlefield is the reconnaissance. Since the snipers are masters of surività, they are perfectly suitable for sneaking behind the enemy force such as traditional infantry, snipers can also disassemble and find the enemy with some rifle shots positioned. Instead of involving the entire enemy force such as traditional infantry, snipers concentrate their efforts on hunting for people - officers, pilots, reinforcement drivers, technicians and communication operators. With deadly strokes that kill without warning, military snipers break both the will of the enemy and the ability to fight. When there are no specific goals, a sniper will try opportunities targets. Tracing enemy movements, the snipers patiently await for unaware soldiers to present the opportunity of a perfect blow. An officer taking a break to smoke a cigarette, a pilot flight that controls his helicopter, an armed guard on patrol - these are all targets of opportunities. "You want to take what you will help your friends more." This is what the Army Ranger Sniper had to tell to select opportunities goals. Continue: ... when you are in the military, you have experience knowing how a commander acts. Know a private Joe of no one is generally sitting behind a mound or sitting in a hole with his weapon. You can tell who those who look - 'ok, this guy is responsible and that boy is nobody' - only because of the way they act. This is one of the reasons for the field you shouldn't greet the officers. Dies, in the field, you sitting there to look at and a boy walks and greets someone and then, "Bam" - you know it's an officer. It's one of those things you collect. The numbers are also used in support roles. These support roles can be an over-watch position or a block action. When a sniper is in an over-watch position, he turns to a hidden place that gives him Delete view of the battlefield. There can support the assault force by taking the enemy forces that are endangering the fingtone advancing. In a blocking action, the snipers established to help ensure a position controlled by their platoon. They can set up on a roof and help earth forces defend their position. Negatives don't just shoot people. They are often ordered to destroy material goals. A sniper can shoot generators, radios, transmitters or supplies of fuel and water. Putting to .50 Gauge around the engine block of a helicopter or transportation is just as effective as putting one in the man who guides them. The numbers are that military strategists refer to as strength multipliers. Simply, a strength multiplier is an individual or small team that, through the use of special tactics, can do the damage of a much larger force. What is incredible of the nature of their missions, the snipers travel with very little equipment, moving patiently under the cover of the brush or night. But they never travel alone. The sniper teams must often stay completely for hours or days at a time to avoid detection, waiting for the right time to take the shot. In the next section, we will learn how the sniper's teams work together to reach "the perfect shot". Source: Rare the first-person shooter was among the genres of the most popular video games for almost a decade. As a result, the studios have pumped first-rate titles scores that let the players go to the war against computer opponents and one another. Although the shooter has increased in popularity in recent years, the gender roots date back to 8-bit playdays.
