CHRISTOPHER HITCHENS was born in 1949 in England and graduated in Balliol College at the University of Oxford. He was the father of three children and author of more than twenty books and booklets, including collections of essays, criticism and reports. His book, God is not great: As the religion poisons Tutto, he was a finalist for the National Book Award 2007 and an international bestseller. His best memory, Hitch-22, was a finalist at the 2010 National Book Critics Circle Award for autobiography. Professor at the New School in New York, he was also professor of I.F. Stone at the Graduate School of Journalism at the University of California, Berkeley. He was an editorialist, literary critic, and contributing editor at Vanity Fair, The Atlantic, Slate, Times Literary Supplement, The Nation, New Statesman, World Affairs, Free Inquiry, among other publications. Christopher Hitchens died in December 2011 at the age of 62. More from Christopher Hitchens Richard Dawkins is a colleague of the Royal Society and was the inaugural owner of the Simonyi chair for the public understanding of science at the University of Oxford. He is the acclaimed author of many books, including the selfish Gene, the disappointment of God, the magic of reality, the unlikely mountain, without fear of the rainbow, the story of Antenato, the greatest show on earth, and science in the soul. He is the winner of numerous honors and awards, including the Royal Society of Literature Award, the Michael Faraday Prize of the Royal Society, the Kistler Prize, the Shakespeare Prize, the Lewis Thomas Prize for Writing about Science, the Galaxy British Book Awards Author of the Year Award, and the International Cosmos Prize of Japan. Richard Dawkins Sam Harris is the author of the Best Seller of the New York Times, The End of Faith: Religion, Terror, and the Future of Reason, who won the 2005 PEN Award for Nonfiction. He graduated in philosophy at Stanford University and studied oriental and western religious traditions, along with a variety of contemplative disciplines for twenty years. Mr. Harris is now completing a doctorate in neuroscience, studying the neural basis of belief, disobedience and uncertainty with functional magnetic resonance (fMRI). His work was discussed in The New York Times, The Los Angeles Times, The San Francisco Chronicle, The Economist, and New Scientist, among many other magazines, and made television appearances on The O'Reilly Factor, Scarborough Country, Faith Under Fire and Book TV. Like Richard Dawkins, Sam Harris is a philosopher, author, and neuroscientist who often discusses with Christopher Hitchens on the evils of religion. Hitchens and Harris may also be described as friends. One of the most popular discussions involving both of these men, as well as a number of other philosophers and authors, was focused on the afterlife and whether it was something that couldbelieved. Both Harris and Hitchens have profusely stated that they did not believe that an afterlife was possible. Christopher Hitchens and Sam Harris were two people whose views and atheist disagreements with organized religion led to a social movement that became known as a new atheism. The central message of this movement, which is what Harris and Hitchens believed in and firmly demonstrated in both their lives, and one Harris still supports, is a belief that "religious should not be simply tolerated, but should be countered, criticized and exposed by rational argument wherever its influence arises." On the death of the hitchens, Harris has put forward a long message dedicated to the memory of the hitchens in which he declared "It is a cliché to say that it was one of his kind and no one can fill the shoes - but the opposite was possible. In his case, it is not even the most efficient tribute of the ring. There wasn't just anyone like him." Harris first met Hitchens in 2007, who was told through this eulogy of sorts. The last debate Harris and Hitchens Allied was the aforementioned, which took place in January 2011. Harris also wrote on hitchens that "It was wonderful to see how much gymnastics was loved and admired - and to be able to share this with him before the end. " © 2021 Mosj Mary and Me Powered By Shopify October 19, 2002 Robert Remini discussed his biography of the religious reformer and founder of the Mormon Church, Joseph Smith, published by Viking.' a Christian Response to Sam Harris, Christopher Hitchens, and Richard DAWKINS with spirit and wisdom. Douglas addresses the annoying objections and false statements against the Christian faith. This book doesn't confuse anything. It is simply a disagreement and is therefore a driver in a predominantly fundamental way. It was inspiring â€“ â€“ stimulating. I remember watching clips after the clip of Sam Harris, Richard Dawkins and Christopher Hetchens Christian, Muslim and "woo's specialists", exposing the fatuity of their beliefs in superstitious absurdity not supported by empirical evidence, often delivered to self-proclaimed prophets by supernatural beings through the epistemically suspicious channel of private revelation. Not that Harris, Dawkins and Hitchens were saying something of a particularly novel â€“ "inconsistencies and contradictions of religious dogma are also evident to small children. Why did God have to sacrifice his son for our sins? Does Satan have free will? And how can the Father, the son and the Holy Spirit be completely separate entities but also one and the same thing? The "New Atheist" movement, which emerged from the bestselling books of the above-mentioned authors, was the intellectual community that many of us 15 years or so yearsThey were desperately in search of "especially after September 11th attacks, which seemed to confirm the infamous thesis of Samuel P. Huntington" Clash of Civilizations ". As with Once put, with many of us agreeing, "we are at war with Islam". (Note: This was a dangerous and xenophobia lie that helped to elect Donald Trump. As Harris said in 2006, anticipating how his Islamophobia brand would allow the rise of Trump, "people who speak more consciously than the threat That Islam puts Europe are actually fascist ". The new atheism seemed to offer moral clarity, stressed intellectual honesty and embraced scientific truths about the nature and works of reality. It gave me an immense hope of knowing that In a world that overflows with irrationality, there have been clear individuals with Sizable public platforms willing to stand for what is right and true - to resist the sanctity in front of the stupidity. Towards the present: what grit that was! Many of the new major atheists have proved to be nothing but self-aggregating people, dogmatic, irascible, censories, morally compromised that, on every occasion, have proposed The powerful on powerless, privileged on marginalized. This may seem hyperbolic, but it's not when, well, look at the tests. So I thought it could be illuminating to take a look at where some of the heavy hitters are today in the Athe and "skeptical" communities. What do they have their links? In what direction have their cultural research to secularize the world? Let's see if you can locate a model: Sam Harris: Probably the progenitor of the new atheism, Harris was one of the most fun atheists for me. More recently, though, he expelled a prodigious amount of time and energy vigorously defending the scientific racism of Charles Murray. He believes that QI is a good intelligence measure. He supported Josh Zepps during a podcast interview not only that blacks are less intelligent than whites, but that this is due to genetic evolution. He has constantly given the white nationalists a pass while claiming that Black Lives Matter is excessively loving, and supported the testing "Muslims, or anyone seem to be that he or she could conceivably be Muslim," at airports. (When Harris believes he is right about something, it becomes practically impossible to talk about it, no matter how many good arguments, expert opinions or hard data are presented. As Donald Trump, it is quite indissoluble.) Harris also partly blamed the loss of Election of Hilary Clinton on "Safe spaces, trigger warnings, [and] new gender pronouns," released a private email exchange with Ezra Klein without Klein's permission, and once he suggested that New Atheism is male-dominated Because there is no extra estrogenic atmosphere ". The primary goal of him these days is to increase moral panic on "social justice warriors" (SJWS), "political correction" and "Wkееism", which believes to constitute a terrible threat to "Western civilization" (a word that has a lot of meaning for white nationalists). As a result, Harris HarrisIt becomes popular among the right, and the feeling of solidarity seems to be mutual. For example, he described Ben Shapiro as "engaged in the â€“ Rules of intellectual honesty and the same principles of charity as regards the positions of others", which is strange since Shapiro is a pathological liar who regularly revives his opponents in service of a racist, misogynous-negrant agenda. Michael Shermer: the founder editor of the skeptic magazine, which once published a favorable review of the "dangerous" book "dangerous" and a defense of Jerry Sandusky by Milo Yiannopoulos, Shermer made a name for himself as "sceptic". However, his legacy was obscured by, among other things, a prolonged history of sexual harassment and assault charges, with James Randi once calling him "a bare boy" with whom he complained many people at the Atheism conferences. In 2014 he was accused of rape, which later joked flipping on Twitter. Since then, he has dedicated an impressive amount of time that shuns "SJWS" and "The Woke", often launching ad hominem attacks and media school insults to those who he disagrees. For exampke, SHERMER reported to "SJWS" as "Mey-beay-behad, scratched, fermented and obsessive" and "a group of weak nany-pamby bedwewlers. Once he tweeted, so Trumpian: "Know this regressive recruitment / SJWS â€“ you will lose. Those of us who believe in truth and justice will prevail. Yours is a failed ideology. "After writing a critique of Steven Pinker's recent book "now!", Which contains a lot of serious mistakes, Shermer's taken to Twitter to call me a "scarafage". None of this should be the surprising one, since it is described as anti-wake, libertarian anti-repair thinking of "Atlas Shrugged" by Ayn Rand is "a remarkable book". But be careful. Shermer also recognized, in writing, that she is fantasized to assassinate people. "If not in reality not killing the particular bastard," he says, "at least I guess I'm going to loot his jaw with a sandwich shredded by round crushing that sent him to boil to the floor." This comes from his book "The moral ARC", which received an extended and luminous blurr from Steven Pinker. Lawrence Krauss: a world-renowned cosmologist who created "a universe of nothing" and ran the project of origins previously at Arizona State University. Krauss was among the most academically accomplished of the new atheists. In 2018, however, he was fired from his work as Director of the Origins project after an investigation found that he had violated the sexual policy of the University's harassment "By creating a woman's breast while on a journey funded by ASU at the end of 2016." He also defended repeatedly and vigorously his friend gemetime Jeffrey Epstein, theof child sex, who "donated $250,000 to the original project over a seven-year span." According to a 2011 Beast Daily article, Krauss said: "I don't feel I feel by no means from my relationship with Jeffrey: I am relieved by this", adding that he did not believe that the "beautiful women and young women" around Epstein were underage. (Many other people said it was impossible not to realize this, and Krauss himself acknowledged that Epstein favored "women between 19 and 23", which surely should have been a red flag.) Following the publication of a 2018 BuzzFeed article detailing some of the sexual harassment charges against Krauss, a wave of additional charges surfaced online, some of which I've cataloged here. Richard Dawkins: Once a big shot in evolutionary biology, Dawkins has energized atheists around the world with his book "The Illusion of God". Over time, however, it has become increasingly clear that he is neither an adult in the room nor a particularly nice guy. For some strange reason, he targeted a Muslim teenager in Texas, who was arrested after a homemade watch he brought to school was mistakenly considered a bomb. He also freaked out about what was called the "Elevatorgate", which started with Rebecca Watson who calmly asked men to be thoughtful and thoughtful about how they make women feel at conferences, for example, in the enclosed space of an elevator. This led to a wave of rapes and death threats directed at Watson, while Dawkins laughed at the situation by writing a shocking letter to "Dear Muslim", in which the first line was "Stop whining, okay?" More recently, she clarified that not be bothered by the charges against Krauss, and posted seemingly anti-trans comments on Twitter. When asked why Twitter caused him so much trouble, he replied, "I love the truth too much." (For Dawkins' disturbing views on Down syndrome fetal abortion, see this.) James Lindsay: Once a promising young atheist, Lindsay released "Everybody Is Wrong About God" in 2015 and, three years later, "How to Have Impossible Conversations", co-authored with Peter Boghossian (below). Referring to himself as "apolitical", but boasting a profile page on Turning Point USA's right-wing and anti-liberal organization, he is now one of the most unbri dled crusaders against the "critical theory of race" (CRT), an idea he seems to have little knowledge of. (This is not surprising, since Lindsay has literally argued that she does not need to understand "gender studies" to ask for the deletion of the whole field. See number 10 here.) In recent years, he has collaborated with Michael Oâ€šFallon, a Christian nationalist and COVID conspirator, and now rakes up a lot of money through Patreon â€“ a proof that cheating on "freedom of speech" and "CRT" pays. Known for her social media presence, Lindsay has called "whores" the women with whom it is agreement, while â€“ An Serioâ€“ launches insults against intellectual opponents who underlie his lies. Recently he claimed that anti-Semitism is caused by cute Jews (ie. they are doing themselves), spread Covid covid conspiracy And he stated in 2020 that people should vote for Donald Trump (as he did) because Joe Biden is a neo-marxist, or you succumbs to the influence of neo-Marxists scary as Black Lives Matter. Last year, Lindsay has co-author of the commercially successful book "Cynical theories", which received brilliant support from Steven Pinker but repeatedly mistressed the ideas of those who hysterically, and incorrectly, statements are distinguishing "Western civilization ". And we do not enter your crazy delirious conspiracy theories on the "great restoration", which apparently, as someone Lindsay has Ritweeted put it, "enters introducing a new global planetary diet"! If you want to understand the vision of the world of Lindsay, I suggest you read the great book by Jason Stanley "How Fascism works", which perfectly captures the spirit of anti-intellectual, anti-academic and antisocial justice of Lindsay. Peter Boghossian: a "philosopher" at the Portland State University and "long-standing collaborator of Stefan Molyneux" (a supremacher white demagogogogogogogogogogogogogogogogogation that once declared: "I don't see humanity as a single species ..."), Boghossian wrote "a manual for creating atheists" in 2013. A year later, he tweeted: "I never understood how someone could be proud to be gay. How can it be proud of something that didn't work? " This was followed by a defense of the Nazis (nobody outside the Germany of Hitler should never be called "Nazi"), and a refusal Stern of the historically accurate affirmation that "slavery ... was not simply a unlucky thing that it is happened to blacks. It was an American institution, created by and for the good of the A © lite. " In 2017, Boghossian and Lindsay tried to "hoax" gender studies by publishing a fake article in a peer-reviewed genre studies magazine (note: the magazine had nothing to do with gender studies). But it was discovered that this was based on a demonstrable lie, which of course have never admitted. Their card ended up in a Pay-to-Publish newspaper. This has been followed by an even more elaborate and even more evil hoax ", which led to a response from the professors of the Portland State University who claim that "the basic spite and a perverse interest in public humiliation seem to have passed any real academic purpose. " In fact, Boghossian and the crew of him did not obtain the approval of the institutional review council for this experiment, with serious accusations of non-ethical actions. "I believe the results of the vision of this office of your research behavior", wrote the vice-president for "research and graduation studies" at the University of Boghossian, "believes concerns about the lack of academic integrity, questionable ethical behavior, And the violation of rule employees. " 6 This year, Boghossian â€“ a vocal critic of "Cancel Culture" â€“ e" has asked "the Defunding of Portland State University", which described incorrectly how to promote "liberal ideologies". (See here for more.) David Silverman: Silverman made a name for himself as a "Firebrand" Firebrand " also appearing on the Fox News show by Bill O'Reilly several times to challenge "Papa Bear" in person. But "explosive attacks of sexual violence and unrevealed conflicts of interest" made Silverman dismiss the American Ateists, of whom he was president. In the following years, he gave voice to a flux of complaints about feminism, social justice and the like, referring to social justice as a "carcinogenic social movement" which "must be annulled", adding: "I have a lot of regrets to be in your piagnuculous imitation of feminism." The same day, he spoke with Sargon of Akkad (alias Carl Benjamin, member of the UKIP extreme right-wing party) of the "feminist tyranny." (More here, here and here.) Steven Pinker: At first, many of us, Pinker seemed really interested in maintaining his intellectual integrity. But once again, great expectations meant only a harder collapse. Consider that Pinker has stated that rape is often "over-reported." In support of this, it cites as primary sources right-wing personalities like Christina Hoff Sommers and Heather MacDonald. In recent years, he has been misled on "political correctness", social justice and "wake", and participated in the 2017 "Unsafe Space Tour" of university campuses, organized by the right-liberal magazine Spiked. He also discovered, with great regret of Pinker, who had witnessed the sexual trafficker Jeffrey Epstein, appearing even in the photographs with Epstein taken after the latter had been convicted of sexual crimes in 2008. Here is a photo of Pinker with Dawkins (and the new atheist Daniel Dennett) while flying to a TED conference with Epstein. Pinker's answer? It is difficult to invent: while being a noisy "opposer" of censorship, bad ideas must be exposed to light! Freedom of speech must never be impeded! «Pinker has blocked half Twitter to prevent people from mentioning his previous ties to this rapist and pedophile. Of course, this has turned back against, attracting even more attention to the question, a phenomenon that I call "Epstein Pinker Effect" (which is almost identical to the Streisand Effect but specific, well, to Pinker and Epstein). Although Pinker has never been so linked to the "New Atheism" as others, his influence within the movement, partly because of his defense for secularism, is undeniable. (See here for more.) This is not a complete list. But enough to make clear the epistemic and moral turpitude of this crowd. There is nothing ad hominem in saying this, among other things: the point is simply that the company keeps itself counts. The sad thing is that the neo-theistic movement could have made the difference "a positive difference" in the world. Rather, he gradually merged with the factions of the Alt-Right to become what the former editor of theYork Times Bari Weiss calls the «Intellectual Dark WebÂ» (IDW), a heterogeneous group of pseudo-intellectual whose luminaries include Jordan Peterson, Eric and Bret Weinstein, Douglas Murray, Dave Rubinâ, and e Shapiro, in addition to the above mentioned ones. At the heart of this fusion was the creation of a new religious movement of sorts focused on the loss of power felt among white men because of the empowerment of other people. When it was once acceptable, according to cultural norms, for men to sexually harass women with impunity, or make racist and sexist harmful comments without worrying about losing an opportunity talking, being held responsible can feel like an injustice, even if the exact opposite is the case. Pinker, Shermer and some of the others like to preach on "moral progress", but in fighting social justice under the misleading banner of "talking free", not only the embodied fascists but prevent further moral progress for the marginalized. Another way to understand the situation is: Some of these people have acted badly in the past. Others don't want to worry about the accusations of acting badly in the future. Others are still able to behave themselves, but they worry that their friends may get into trouble for the past or future bad behavior. As a result, the most immediate and pressing threat to their "well-being" has shifted from frightening Muslim immigrants, evangelical Christians and violent terrorists to 19-year-olds on university campuses and BLM activists motivated by "wokeness". That's why Lindsay collaborated with a Christian nationalist and why Boghossian speaks of the "Great Alignment" in which alarmist anti-woke, like him, end up joining hands with "preservative Christians" in "Culture War 2.0". What binds these people together is an aggregate sense of perpetual victimity. Christians, of course, believe they are persecuted without pause (note: they are not). IDW believes that they are the poor defenseless victims of "CRT," "theory of points of view" and other awakened academy men. But really, if "Grievance Studies" studies something, it should be like this group of extremely privileged white men came to believe that they are the real victims of systemic oppression. An excellent example of this illusion comes from an inadvertently exhilarating interview with Boghossian for the Epoch Times, a media company associated with the Falun Gong movement that "fueling the far-right in Europe" and has spread COVID conspiracy theories. In it, Boghossian warns that "the ideology of awakening" produced "a recipe for cultural suicide". This brought it — the co-author of "How to have impossible conversations" — to sponge extremist rhetoric like this: I'm done playing. I am making a large-scale ideological war against the enemies of Western civilization. . We must mediate absolutely zero tolerance with this ideology, and the only way out at this point is the ideological war on a large scale, and I will not take prisoners, .... I look for complete elimination andof ideology from every aspect of life. He is scary, intolerant and even fascist. And it is exactly where the movement of the new atheism, atheism, is over the exasperation of those who still care about secularism. To conclude, let me finish: as proved to be just as biased, racist, dogmatic, ethnocentric, closed-minded and authoritarian as many of the religious groups they initially deplored.
