Photo courtesy of Phynart Studio/E+/Getty Images Acid reflux, often referred to as heartburn, is an uncomfortable burning sensation that can occur after a heavy meal as a result of stomach acid buildup. This article explores acid reflux, what causes it, and how to prevent and treat this uncomfortable condition. Acid reflux is common and most people will experience symptoms at some point in their lives. It may happen only rarely, or it may happen frequently. Persistent acid reflux is associated with the development of gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD). Photo courtesy: Carol Yee/Moment/Getty Images Common symptoms of acid reflux include: Pain or burning sensation in the chest or throat Unpleasant taste in the mouth Acid or partially digested food regurgitated in the mouth Other symptoms may include: Nausea Laryngitis (pain or irritation in the throat) Feeling of eating Cough or need to "clean the throat" Snoring or voice change Indigestibility Dysphagia (difficulty swallowing) Dental erosion Halitosis (bad breath) Asthma Hypo Acid reflux may occur intermittently or frequently. Symptoms usually occur after a meal, particularly a large, greasy, or spicy meal, and usually get worse when you lie down or bend down. However, some symptoms associated with acid reflux may be a warning sign of a more serious underlying condition. If you are experiencing any of the following "alarm" symptoms you should consult your doctor: Bloody vomiting Dark or black stools or blood in the stool Chest pain that appears at random or after exercise Uncaused shortness of breath Difficulty swallowing Loss of involuntary weight loss Excessive fatigue Loss of appetite What causes acid reflux? Rule When a person ingests food, the esophageal sphincter of the esophagus relaxes to allow food to pass and then closes, avoiding reflux. In patients with acid reflux, the esophageal sphincter may be weak, and can't close to close completely. As a result, the stomach evening after the food passes can flow from the stomach up into the esophagus. The reflux of stomach acid and food particles create the burning symptoms of heartburn. Photo courtesy: Pauloff/Science Photo Library / Getty Images Several factors can increase the chance of reflux from the stomach. These include: Being overweight, being pregnant or smoking drinking a lot of alcohol drinking a lot of coffee having certain disorders of the connective tissue heartburn has been reported in the stomach or throat have a hiatal hernia some foods can also trigger the start of symptoms. These include: greasy food, high-fat meals, Butter, Mayonnaise, sauce with cream, salad dressing, chocolate, dairy products, carbonated drinks, and drinks with caffeine. Citrus and acids can also trigger symptoms. In addition, certain medications can also trigger heart acid reflux such as steroids, arterial pressure medications, non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs (NSAIDs) such as ibuprofen, antibiotics, contraceptive and antidepressant pills. How do you treat the reflux? The acid reflux is typically diagnosed by a medical simply based on its symptoms, as long as they are mild. If your doctor is worried, there may be an underlying affection such as Gerd or Esophagitis, you can request more evidence. Photo courtesy: Science photo Library / Getty Images These could include: superior gastrointestinal or esophagogastroduodenoscopy (EGD), in which a small camera is passed through the mouth and in the stomach to examine any signs of DzA ± on your esophagus or stomach. Less invasive means, such as samples of stool and blood analysis of barium swallow, which is a type of radiograph taken while swallowing. If you only suffer from an uncommon reflux, as of a spicy meal, the use of therapeutic antacids can be useful. These come in chewable tablets or liquid form. Side effects of antacid include: Wind and pregnancy. If you are experiencing a more frequent acid reflux, more than twice a week, you should see your doctor. They can recommend prophylactic drugs to prevent acid reflux. The most common medication is an inhibitor of the proton pump (PPI), for example, for example. Lansoprazole (Prevent) and Omeprazole (Prilosec). Function of PPI to block part of the stomach acid production. Side effects of PPI medications include nausea, diarrhea, pregnancy, headache and eruption. Some PPI medications can be obtained on the counter without a recipe. You should consult your doctor before taking PPI medications if you have any other health condition, or if you are taking other medications, supplements, vitamins, herbal remedies or recreational medications. Another medicament commonly used is H2-blockers, for example, Ranitidine (Zantac) and famotidine (PEPCID AC). H2-blockers also work to reduce stomach acid production. It is possible that it must continue with long-term medication, or it may be possible to "ignore the medicament and control the acid reflux with alterations of lifestyle alone. In rare cases where medications have not had success in relief Of the symptoms, surgery can be suggested to repair and strengthen the esophageal sphincter and prevent gastric reflux. Tips to avoid acid reflux: Keep a diary of your symptoms and food intake. This can help you identify food "Trigger", which can avoid. Eat smaller and more regular meals. Avoid large meals. End eating at least 2, 3 hours before bedtime on the bed. Avoid eating while it is lying, and, while you eat, stay in vertical position. Avoid smoking. When you sleep, lift your head on an additional pillow or two. If the acid reflux occurs frequently and left untreated, it can lead to others Like esophagitis and gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD). GERD is a condition that results from the chronic or persistent acid reflux over time, which causes the coating of the esophagus. Untreated, GERD is associated with a one risk of a precancerous condition called Barret's esophagus, and esophagus cancer, especially in smokers and heavy drinkers. It is possible to live a balanced and healthy life even if you have acid reflux. You may need to work with a dietitian or doctor to establish healthy eating and behavior patterns, and you may need to be prepared for some trial and error before you find a successful treatment plan, but in the end, many people can successfully control their condition.
