Theme 1: Changing nature of governance/ outsourcing and privatisation

- Opinion: Must put extensive accountability provisions into contracts and give the ombudsman teeth, to ensure human rights such as on Manus Island with Borris death and G45. But must be globally economically competitive and not a nanny state.
- What is governance?
 - Governance is the action of government exercising power, by making and implementing decisions.
- How has governance changed?
 - During the 1980s and 1990s the government restructure and reduced the involvement of government in service delivery
 - Care & McDonald
- Government increased reliance on outsourcing and devolving functions to private sector bodies whenever it felt that those bodies could deliver a particular function more efficiently and effectively.
 - Return to liberal ideas.
- Why is it an issue for administrative law?
 - Private companies are not subject to judicial review for government.
 - Had to give consent to allow exportation of wheat.
 - Kirby dissent: was government power per Qatar.
 - Anytime government wants to remove accountability can simply contract out a function or privatise a body. Especially if highly political.
 - Should the private company or government be accountable?
 - Independent contractor fell within scope of review as had a decision post their decision open to review. Any step leading up to the minister's decision could be reviewed, as impacts minister's decision. Two-step process.
- Two approaches in administrative law to this issue.
 - UK Quint approach: where a private takeover panel was ruled to be subject to it as exercising a public function and operating within a public law character. Not clear whether Quint forms part of Australian law but per Plaintiff v Ash constitutional text of s75(2) likely to make difficult.
 - Institutional approach, administrative law applies to bodies/ people who are part of the formal institutions of government. Government accountability will continue to decrease Plaintiff v Ash.
- Administrative review board report: "The contracting out of government services should not result in a loss of government accountability or ability of public to seek IR."

Jack Simm spent a year fighting the case, and now he's won. He said winning the case in a civil court last month was a "perfect review" for his law degree. Jack Simm won his first case while still at university. A law student used his textbooks to sue the landlord for his "inadequate" classrooms. University students, winning his first trial in court at the age of 19. Jack Simm sued the landlord for an alleged breach of the contract because his apartment was "like a construction site" when he moved to September 2020. The university student, who was younger then and is now second year at the University of East Anglia (UEA), spent a year fighting the case and has now won. He said winning the case in a civil court last month was "perfect review" for his law degree. Prior to his one-hour hearing, Jack referred to the statutes and jurisprudence he had learned during his studies to build a 10-page legal claim for the repayment of the deposit and the first month's rent, equal to 859. Jack successfully sued the company that had organised the Velocity Student accommodation for breach of the contract following a series of accommodation problems. Jack used the review books to sue the landlord (Jack Simm/ SWNS). The student, who is also a rugby player at the university, said, "This is the best review he has ever done." "Curiously, while the case was ongoing I was studying contract law, so I opened the textbook and read the notes. I was in a real situation with real consequences. I was thrown into the gutter. Winning proves I can do it. It gave me a huge boost in confidence." Jack claimed that his landlord had breached the contract, since the accommodation First year in Norwich, Norfolk was unfit to live in. He said there was no heating or Wi-Fi, dust everywhere, and builders still working in the accommodation, which Jack had not visited before he arrived when he joined the UEA through a clean-up a few days before his term began. Jack is a law student at al Oriental Anglia (Getty Images / IsterockPhoto) Jack raised the halls and stopped paying his rent after a week like the owner "does not rectify the problems" - and then he started building his legal case. The Undergrad of Newcastle said: "We hunted and arrived à €
